Seals and Money

Congratulations regions! Every region received seals of approval from all three NGO's! This means that these representatives were satisfied with the proposals placed forth by the regions according to their company's values. Also, the five companies distributed money to all the regions based on how the regions promised to use their money. Although it's not the best thing, large companies have much control over what policies get passed in the WHO. If you can find a way to impress companies, you are likely to find a way to get your policy passed!

breastmilk is important for the health development of babies. However, in some regions of the world, breastfeeding is not possible whether that be due HIV transmission through breastmilk or lack of a mother to provide breastmilk. Many delegates wanted to increased education on the importance of breastfeeding and find alternatives to breastmilk in where it is unavailable. Alternatives might include formula by Nestle.

2019 AMWHO at UNC Regional Conference

CRISIS AVERTED!

During the second committee session of the conference, the EMRO region was hit with a crisis when Iran decided to execute a bioterrorism attack on their nearby country, Egypt. The delegates were forced to come up with a resolution before being able to adjourn for lunch. Thankfully, the delegates were able to work together to reach a solution agreed upon by all parties. Their long-term goal is to work to become less reliant on Western countries. At this time, we are unsure of how this will affect international relationships.

SCANDAL!!!

Nestle, a company known for their food and drink products, has recently come back into the spotlight after a video of a Nestle representative was leaked to the press. In this video, Nestle was speaking to their headquarters about how the EURO delegates were not falling for the lies being presented about the benefit of their baby formula. Then later in a press conference held by CNN and BBC news networks, exchanges between this representative and a CNN correspondent shows the Nestle representative bribing the correspondent to report the untested improved benefits of their formula compared to breastmilk.

AMWHO Cares About Mothers and Children

One of the most discussed topics was how to improve the mother and child relationship. In the past, there has been a lot of misinformation shared about breastmilk. Today, it is widely accepted by the World Health Organization that
